

From the President's Desk...

"Time flies when you're having fun!"

Dear Friends and Alumni,

I grew up in a home where cliches were frequently used to capture the meaning of events and activities. When I was in the sixth grade, I went on my first date. My mother was our chauffeur as I took a cute little girl in my class to a movie. I was filled with anxiety before and during the date, and quite relieved when it was over. My mother summarized my afternoon by saying, "Time certainly flies when you're having fun!" Truth is, due to my shyness, I was never so glad that my date was over because is seemed that time stood still for almost three hours!

In July of 1997, I assumed the position of President of Spartanburg Methodist College. In many ways, my first year at SMC was somewhat like my first date --- long and filled with anxiety because the College had many needs. But thankfully, the fun-filled days have far outweighed the difficult days during my presidency. Indeed, "time flies when you're having fun!" was true for me throughout my tenure at the College. I truly have enjoyed my work and "time has flown by far too quickly." It is difficult for me to believe that my tenure as President will soon end.

Spartanburg Methodist College is an institution in transition. Dr. Colleen Keith and her administrative team are prepared to lead the College to even greater accomplishments. I have great confidence in our Board of Trustees, faculty and staff. This confidence reassures me that the best days lie ahead for this great institution!

We've enjoyed many successful projects in the last 12 years: The completion of the outdoor athletic complex, the addition of the beautiful lobby on the Buchheit Administration Building, and the construction of Bridges Residence Hall, Sparrow Residence Hall, the Vassey Information Technology Center, and the Phyllis Buchheit Board Room. We have completed several projects to improve our facilities and beautify our grounds. Our enrollment has grown substantially, and the academic abilities of our students have increased. Our endowment grew from approximately $8.5 million to over $19 million (before the current economic downturn), and many generous friends have established endowed scholarships and/or included us in their estate. I stood on the shoulders of the presidential giants who came before me as we completed these projects and grew as an institution. I am grateful for the leadership of the previous presidents and the generosity of our many friends as we brought these visions to fruition.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees recently approved a new capital campaign, the "Committee of 200." The focus of this project is to beautify the grounds in front of Judd Residence Hall. I ask you to join me by supporting this important capital project. We seek 200 persons to each give $1,000 (or more) to reach the goal ($200,000) for this project. If you are unable to make a gift of $1,000 at this time, we ask that you send a smaller gift to indicate your support of the College. It is my personal goal to successfully complete this beautification project before my tenure ends on June 30, 2009.

Daune and I will always be members of the SMC family. We extend our best wishes to the new administration and to our Trustees, colleagues, alumni and many friends. May God be with you as you continue to carry out the mission of Spartanburg Methodist College!

Sincerely,

Charles P. Leagu

SMC's First Female President Named

Pr. Colleen Keith has been named SMC's seventh president and will lead the college into its second century. She succeeds President Charles P. Teague who is retiring, effective July 1, 2009, after serving as President for 12 years.

She currently serves as Executive Director of Development at Ohio University in Athens, OH.

Phyllis DeLapp, college trustee and member of the search committee, noted that "Spartanburg Methodist College will reap significant benefits from the leadership skills that Dr. Keith brings to the college."

Dr. Keith, a native of upstate New York, has more than 20 years of experience in higher education, in capacities such as student service roles, program development, teaching, fund raising, and administration.

She holds a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from State University of New York in Binghamton, a Master of Education from the University of Pittsburgh, and a Doctor of Philosophy in Higher Education Administration and Student Affairs from The Ohio State University.

While serving in her current role at Ohio University, Dr. Keith also teaches courses in the Master of Business Administration and Master of Communication degree programs at Franklin University

She previously taught in the freshman program at both The Ohio State University and Rogers State College.

Her academic career includes a decade at the Methodist Theological School in Ohio where her responsibilities as Executive Vice President included oversight for business and finance, operations, buildings and grounds, personnel and benefits offices, budget creation and management.

As Vice President for Development at the Ohio Seminary, she led the staff in planning and implementing a $30 million campaign that surpassed its goal.

"The [Spartanburg Methodist College] Board of Trustees sought an individual with strong fundraising skills to lead the college to the next level of excellence. Dr. Keith's experience in that area is outstanding," said Bill Painter, board member and chair of the presidential search committee

Dr. Keith began her career in higher education working as an advising specialist at Rogers State College, formerly a two-year public college, in Oklahoma. She continued in a similar role at The Ohio State University regional campus in Marion, OH, serving as a program manager and academic advisor.

She will be one of only eight female college presidents in South Carolina when she assumes her duties as SMC President on July 1. Only three of those institutions, including SMC, are members of the South Carolina Independent Colleges and Universities.

SMC faculty and staff, who had the opportunity to meet Dr. Keith on campus during the first week of April, perceived Dr. Keith as personable and a "wonderful candidate." They praised her spirit, insightfulness, and communication skills.

Upon accepting the Spartanburg Methodist College presidency, Dr. Keith said, "I was attracted to this position because Spartanburg Methodist College has a reputation for providing an outstanding educational experience to young people."

"I am excited to work closely with the faculty and staff as we guide the college into its second century. The college has served the state of South Carolina, the Spartanburg community, and the United Methodist Church with distinction. I look forward to becoming a part of a long-standing tradition of academic excellence in a church-related environment."

Dr. Keith's husband Barry is a private practice clinical psychologist with more than 20 years experience and is also a varsity high school baseball coach. She has a son who attends Miami University of Ohio.

College a stronger institution positioned for even greater success.

of its uniqueness, character, and mission. He established a connection with SMC early on.

"When I had gone through the process [of being considered for a college presidency] on other occasions, I never really made contact with the people on a relational level. This time it was different. I had never felt that before. Knowing that the Trustees were solidly behind the institution helped solidify that connection for me," says Dr. Teague.

He says he prayed about it, thought about it carefully, and looked at the opportunity for multiple perspectives. In the end, he was sold.

Challenges

Dr. Teague realized quickly that there were many challenges to being a college President — but none which he wasn't afraid to take on.

"I did not make any immediate changes. I listened a lot. I tried to find out from different perspectives what was happening in various areas," Dr. Teague recalls.

The two areas that he found needed the most immediate attention were enrollment and fundraising.

"Those two really go hand in hand. Our budget is generally around 80 percent dependent on enrollment and tuition received. It is perennial problem making sure the budget is balanced. Unfortunately, many of the challenges we face tie directly back to money," Dr. Teague says.

In today's economy, this is especially tough.

"Our enrollment has gone up. But we're losing ground still. Raising tuition is always a tough choice to make, but sometimes it has to be done," Dr. Teague states.

One area he says the College has made headway is through increasing faculty salaries, which helps increase creativity in the classroom. The average faculty salary has increased by approximately $14,000 under Dr. Teague's leadership. Monies have also been made available for faculty and staff development each year.

He notes that parental involvement has become more of a concern in recent years also.

"They're not allowing their students to mature. I'm delighted that parents want to take part of the responsibility for the education of their students, but a lot of times, with the way they go about it, they hinder their student's development. I hope this is a passing phenomenon - but at the same time, I hope interest and support in their students never ends," he says.

Building a Community

Dr. Teague says he has found that having the right people in place who are dedication to the mission of the College is a key part of building a successful community.

"One of the things you do as a president is build a community of people. At the time, when you hire people, you're gambling. Until you work with somebody, you never really know how your decision will turn out. But it's not a foolproof process," he says.

With that may also come what Teague says are some of the toughest decisions any employer will have to make - ones which Addressing all the different constituencies often leads to an issue of time management.

"There are the students. There is the Board. There are faculty and staff. There is the United Methodist Church. There are fundraising needs. It's a juggling act figuring out how much time you devote to each," states Teague.

The relationship with the church is one that is very critical.

"It's one that you devote a lot of time and effort to developing. The church needs to know that we are keeping our mission in the forefront. And we must always honor our commitments," says Teague.

Serving the Community

Dr. Teague says one thing he saw an opportunity for when he became President of SMC was increased participation in the Spartanburg community.

"The College had not been engaged with the community in the past to the demay lead to someone's dismissal.

"I have been trained as a minister that you don't want to hurt anyone, but the responsibility in this position demands that you take into consideration how those kinds of decisions impact the mission of college. It's a personal thing to me. It's the most difficult," he comments.

He adds that he is very proud of the faculty and staff in place at SMC and feels confident that he is leaving the institution in good hands.

He also points out during his tenure that the character and outlook of the Board of Trustees has changed in very positive ways and the Board is much more engaged with the College now also.

"The board has come a long way. When I arrived, it was not very active. It took a lot to get to the point where we could do board development activities and we could assess members of the board. That process has built up over time," he says.

gree that it could have been. But that has changed tremendously," he states.

Dr. Teague led SMC to develop its Freshmen Day of Service in 2001, which has been held each year since and provides much needed service work within the Spartanburg community. SMC's freshman class goes out into the community the first Saturday of the academic year each year to work with dozens of local agencies.

"I am so proud of how successful our Day of Service has become. It has literally snowballed," he says.

During Dr. Teague's tenure, SMC has also become involved with the CollegeTown Initiative started by Spartanburg Mayor Bill Barnet. That initiative develops and implements programs that allow the county's six colleges to interact with each other.

"The whole focus has been on developing things students would enjoy and would be enriched by - I hope it continues. This is one very positive outlet where we all come together to serve the community. We have all enjoyed seeing this come together," Dr. Teague says.

Good Times and Proud Moments

"I will always look back on my time at SMC with extreme fondness," Dr. Teague says.

His favorite memories center around students, faculty, and staff.

Dr. Teague says watching the faculty and staff grow and develop close bonds between one another has been very rewarding.

And having new facilities constructed - Bridges and Sparrow Residence Halls and the Phyllis Buchheit Board Room and Vassey Information Technology Center - has been enjoyable to watch and celebrate.

"Of course there is the excitement of getting a $1 million gift — three times - which has allowed us to construct those beautiful facilities. Seeing us find ways to better serve our students are very pleasant memories," he adds.

What is he proudest of?

"... the engagement of the Trustees. They've really come to have ownership in the institution. Helping them develop as a board and jump-starting that process was very rewarding. I get really happy when I see that the Board, faculty, and staff are on the same page — we've done good in a lot of ways around here. That makes me smile," Dr. Teague adds.

Reflection

Dr. Teague says he was in the right place, at the right time, when he decided he wanted to be President of SMC and accepted the offer to take over in that position.

"I hope that I've brought some characteristics that helped foster some things around here that we're proud of," he states.

He's come to understand himself better, at the same time.

"You can have all kinds of ideas as to what your values are but it's only when you get under pressure that you truly realize what they are," he adds.

Life After SMC

Dr. Teague looks toward his retirement with optimism, but sadness at the same time.

(l-r) SMC Board of Trustees Chairman Jerry Calvert recognizes Dr. Charles Teague and Daune Teague, for their contributions and dedication to SMC over the past 12 years, during the 2009 Commencement services.

"We will miss SMC. I will especially miss the people here. It's really become an extended family for myself, Daune, and our daughter, Julie," he comments.

But he looks forward to spending some time on hobbies and with his family. He also hopes to make it back to SMC to watch many athletic events.

And he and Daune are about to be grandparents.

"I can't even begin to tell you how excited we are," he says, smiling.

He already has some lessons in mind that he hopes his granddaughter will learn throughout life.

"I hope that she will learn by example. I hope she will learn compassion and that love is not something you take lightly. Be yourself. Come to know who you are - and give yourself to what you're passionate about," he states.

Legacy

Dr. Teague says that SMC's next president, Dr. Colleen Keith, will have to establish her own relationships and build her own community. That's part of what being a college president is about.

He adds that some of the challenges he found when he first came to SMC are challenges that Dr. Keith will face also.

But he will still be around if any advice is wanted.

"I will always be available to the Board and Dr. Keith for counsel or wisdom. At the same time, I'm not going to pick up the phone and say "what did you do?," Dr. Teague comments.

What will Dr. Keith find as SMC's next President?

"She will find the Charlie Teague way of doing things. But she needs to be who she is. She doesn't need to copy what I've done," he states.

What does he think will people say in 50 years about his presidency?

"I hope that people look back and say this was a time when the College pulled within itself, strengthened its identity and mission, and really devoted the time and energy into making that a reality. They'll look back and see we built two residence halls, a board room and IT center, and spiced up the place here and there. I hope that my legacy will be one of developing a community. That community is what has to take the college forward. I hope that people look back and say it was a good time when things really began to come together," he adds.

At some point during his tenure at SMC, Art Hartzog told someone that he wanted a parade to celebrate his retirement when the day came.

What would transpire though during Hartzog's 10 years at SMC was a parade of accomplishments that have improved all aspects of student affairs at the College. It was just part of a nearly 40-year career in higher education.

Dr. Art Hartzog became Dean of Students at SMC in 1999, after having spent four years out of higher education running the non-profit Darlington Community Action Agency, in Hartsville, SC.

It was at a time when Dr. Hartzog was still going through a lifechanging experience. He had previously been Dean of Students at Coker College, but left that position following a cancer diagnosis.

"It absolutely changed my life. I would never say having cancer was a good experience, but it changed my approach to life in general, changed the direction of my career, and deepened my spiritual commitment - my belief in all the things that God can create and guide and my appreciation for friends and family. A life threatening situation will do that," Dr. Hartzog states.

Managing a public agency was good for a while, but he began to miss higher education and decided to get back into the field. That's when he found out that SMC was looking for a Dean of Students.

"I didn't know much about the college, but I did know a few people here. And after talking to folks, everything about the job appealed to me," he comments.

Although he was delighted at what he found at SMC, Dr. Hartzog realized quickly there were a lot of improvements that could be made.

"There were great people here. The character and environment was charming - but there wasn't an overreaching attitude of student development," Dr. Hartzog notes.

Not one to back down from a challenge, Dr. Hartzog set to the task of strengthening the student development division. But he took his time.

"I spent the first six months studying the way things were and assessed the environment. I walked around to become more aware of everything, establish relationships, and find out what was going on. I went in every residence hall and the rooms to see what they were like. I went to faculty and staff offices and talked," recalls Dr. Hartzog.

What he found was that policies and procedures for the division were nearly non-existen ans student discipline was not very effective.

FRONTIERS

"We've changed that tremendously," Hartzog says.

The first thing Dr. Hartzog did was institute a new points-based discipline system, like one he developed at Coker, which, instead of being punitive, helps students grow and learn.

He instantly found there were some tough discipline cases – but there are some each year. It's a hazard of the job.

"There are many cases in which the student, the parents, the administration, or I, or all of us, have had difficulty dealing with it. We've sent students home, which is never easy," Dr. Hartzog states.

He says that he learned early in his career that student discipline is probably one of the most difficult and trickiest responsibilities found within student affairs.

"When you have to expel a student — when you have to tell them their college career at SMC, at least, is over, it's not easy. But it is just as important to help them adjust their attitudes and outlook. I've been in situations where something looks bleak or bad and found a way to use my life experience to help teach them how to deal with it," Dr. Hartzog says.

He adds that developing confidence over the years has made handling student discipline a challenge that he feels he handles very well.

"I - we - have calmed parents down and helped avoid tougher situations. In most cases, the student and/or parent has left with more appreciation than criticism," Dr. Hartzog comments.

He has also sought to create an open atmosphere between the student development staff and and the rest of the College.

Dr. Hartzog, who did his doctoral dissertation on emergency management, also set forth to improve communications and response issues related directly to that.

Under Dr. Hartzog's watch, the campus security department became a state accredited police agency. He has also overseen the development of the campus Emergency Response Plan and Procedures.

Dr. Hartzog praises his former and current staff for their dedication to the mission of the College and to its students.

"Everyone on this staff is a true professional. Our student development staff here at SMC is now much stronger and is respected as among the best in the state," Dr. Hartzog says.

Each of the programs in his division — residence life, counseling and career services, student activities and leadership development, campus safety, and student health — has seen marked improvements in recent years.

"We're able to do things now, whether through the increased training for our residence life staff or with the latest version of career placement services, that we wouldn't have thought possible when I first started at SMC," Dr. Hartzog says.

One thing he is extremely proud of is how far the annual orientation programs have come.

"The program flows very well – so smooth it's unbelievable. It's the staff that really makes this come together," Dr. Hartzog says.

But one aspect that is never easy is dealing with tragedy, of which he says SMC has had its share.

"There have probably been 15-20 students lost in the time I've been here. That can be very traumatic, but we reach out and provide counseling to deal with those difficult situations," Dr. Hartzog says.

He adds that, along with most other aspects of student development, some situations are made easier by "having an organized approach on how we handle things so that when something comes up we don't have to create new responses or policies."

But in Dr. Hartzog's eyes what it all comes down to is listening to people.

"Everyone in this division has adopted a policy of listening to students. A solution is always simpler when you involve people in it, so we listen to each other's ideas also. That is critical," he comments.

One thing that he hopes he has instilled in his staff is a sense of enjoyment for their work. That's one thing he says can really make or break a career in student development — and one which he tries to convey as much as possible.

"People should enjoy their work; they should have fun. They appreciate it when I do. I try to create an environment that is conducive to that. I don't want them to feel that work is work," Dr. Hartzog states.

An open door policy is also critical, for all staff who work in student development.

He says that his experiences at SMC have provided a memorable final chapter to his career and he will take away many fond memories of it. But that's not all.

"Above everything else, I will take away a sense of appreciation for the environment here at SMC. It is such an enjoyable place to work. I'm leaving with a full sense of accomplishment and feel like I've earned a great deal of respect from the faculty, staff and students," Dr. Hartzog comments.

He adds that his proudest moment at SMC came this past academic year – when he gave the 2008 convocation speech.

But he leaves on what he says is a good note.

"SMC has a professional student support staff with a unified philosophy of dealing with students," he says.

He adds that he'll miss the daily interaction with people the most. But he says he will try to keep himself busy with tasks around his new house and may get out on the lake.

And that parade that he wanted — well, he got it. Students, staff, and faculty took a clear spring afternoon on April 27 to honor Dr. Hartzog with a parade across campus, complete with banners and cheers proclaiming gratitude for his dedication to the College and its students.

Leaving An Artistic Footprint

For a one-person art department, Ann Wenz sure accomplished a lot at SMC in the 34 years prior to her retirement at the end of the 2008-2009 academic year.

But she doesn't claim to take a lot of personal credit for it.

"What we do at SMC is done together," Mrs. Wenz says.

What has Mrs. Wenz done at SMC? She has been an instructor, advisor, mentor, colleague, and friend. She has helped mold, encourage, and support young minds.

And even though she is a working artist, "I don't talk about my work a lot. It's nice for the students to understand that their instructor is a working artist. Hopefully that is encouraging to them and shows them that you can turn your passion into a career in some way or another. But I like to focus on them."

Turning her passion into a career is an interesting story according to Mrs. Wenz.

As a child growing up in Michigan, she always had an interest in art — starting with making paper dolls and clothes for them. She became interested in fashion design and ended up in the home economics department at Michigan State University.

After attending art school in Chicago and majoring in fashion and merchandising, she went to Western Michigan and majored in art education, graduating in 1967.

For awhile she taught art at the elementary school level. But when a job called her husband to the Spartanburg area, they moved and Mrs. Wenz would make her way to Spartanburg Methodist College where she became the College's art instructor.

"Everything just kind of gelled. I never wanted to go back to public schools after moving to South Carolina," comments Mrs. Wenz.

As a college art instructor, Mrs. Wenz says that one of her main goals was to foster a love of art in her students and for it to be a learning experience for them at the same time.

"I enjoy seeing a students' reaction to the work they do. Sometimes there are those who you can tell like the process of getting there. I like to see their enthusiasm and the fact they feel good about themselves. But I hope they learn more about themselves and sharing their talents, more so, than just art. If they learn these values and ethics, other than what their art looks like, that is most important, comments Mrs. Wenz.

One thing she never wants is for a student to get turned off of art.

"I like to hear about students' success and what they're doing now. It's especially rewarding to see that some have gone on to some sort of art-related career," says Mrs. Wenz.

Some of her students have even gone on to become art instructors — including Briles Lever, who was recently named Mrs. Wenz's successor at SMC.

Mrs. Wenz says that being a one-person department has been a memorable experience.

"I've had a lot of academic freedom, but I enjoy working with my colleagues. We trust each other and treat our students as a tight-knit group because of how we treat each other," she adds.

Through the years Mrs. Wenz says the curriculum has progressed and new courses have been added. Although all art courses are electives, she has taught four sections each semester and SMC 103 periodically also.

She comments that her role as an advisor is one in which she has always felt the responsibility is "pretty great."

"I have really enjoyed meeting and getting to know a variety of students. It can be especially interesting sometimes working with students who are not my art students," she adds.

Throughout her time at SMC, Mrs. Wenz has been a big proponent of increasing the visibility of the College's arts programs and students. She says that there is now a greater awareness of the arts on campus.

The Fine Arts Night, held each spring, has come about within the last 10 years. This is an opportunity for students to showcase their many artistic talents, from voice to writing to drama and to instrumental performance. SMC arts students also now participate in a juried arts show, in which cash prizes are awarded.

"It is so nice to be able to do these things now. It helps recognize the artistic diversity of our students, as well as helping create a sense of support on campus, from the faculty, staff and their fellow students, for the arts programs and the students who truly love them," says Mrs. Wenz.

And in 2007, SMC dedicated its on-campus art gallery, located in the Marie Burgess Library, to Spartanburg artist Mary Ellen Suitt. The gallery has displayed exhibits from students, local and regional artists, and alumni for many years.

"Having an art gallery is an important part of a liberal arts school," Mrs. Wenz states.

And a sculpture was dedicated to Mrs. Wenz this spring outside the front entrance to her on-campus home for those 34 years, the Frank Walker Building.

Mrs. Wenz helps out a student with an art class assignment.

In another 34 years, students walking past that sculpture may ask about the intsructor to whom it is dedicated. They will find out that she left an artistic footprint that hundreds of students will never forget.

As far as her retirement goes, she plans to stay close and become even more involved in the Spartanburg and Upstate art communities.

"I hope to do more in the community — do some volunteer work at the Spartanburg Art Museum, maybe take some classes. But we'll stay here in Spartanburg. This is the place we love and where our friends are," Mrs. Wenz says.

Laffitte Hired As Dean Of Students

SMC recently chose the newest person to lead its student services programs as Dean of Students.

Ron Laffitte will assume the duties of Dean of Students on July 1, 2009, following the retirement of outgoing Dean Dr. Art Hartzog who has served in the position for 10 years.

Laffitte has 27 years of fulltime staff management, programming, and student development experience, with 17 years specifically in the student activities/student affairs profession.

He currently serves as Associate Dean of Students at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, a position he has held for four years. He previously served at UT as the Director of Student Activities for six years.

"There is no doubt that Art Hartzog's reputation and influence in the field have shed a positive light on our campus. When Ron Lafitte visited us, every group that met with him felt his genuine interest in them and his enthusiasm for his work with students," says Dr. Ann Bowles, SMC Vice President for Academic Affairs.

"For 27 years, he has been committed to making a positive difference in the lives of students. We are confident that his personal interest in students, his knowledge and expertise, and his desire to develop the whole student will enhance the SMC community," she adds.

As Dean of Students at SMC, Lafitte will have Student Activities and Leadership Development; Counseling; Campus Safety; Campus Post Office; Student Health Services; and Housing and Residence Life under his direction.

Laffitte's experience in higher education also includes roles as Assistant Director of Admissions and Graduate Advisor at the University of South Carolina; Assistant Union Director for Activities and Services at Clemson University; and Assistant University Center Director and Program Advisor at the University of Denver.

From these experiences, Laf-fitte says that he will be able "to take away things I've learned and observed over the years in terms of staff management. I will bring that with me, along with the belief in the institution."

"Those of us in student affairs are here because we care about life outside the classroom and seeing students develop and grow. Every student is important," he adds.

Laffitte, a South Carolina native, has a Master of Education in Student Personnel Services from the University of South Carolina and a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology from Winthrop College.

He and his wife Polly have two children – Sarah, a graduate of the University of South Carolina, and Ron, a recent graduate of the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

"I'm excited to come be coming home to my native state and extremely excited about working at Spartanburg Methodist College," he states.

Showing Support For Local Schools

Making Connections With Legislators

SMC hosted a Legislative Appreciation Luncheon in December, which was co-sponsored by Wofford College, Converse College, and Limestone College. Nine members of the South Carolina General Assembly representing Spartanburg and Cherokee Counties attended the luncheon, along with representatives of all four institutions. Pictured below Mike LeFever, Director of the South Carolina Independent Colleges and Universities, speaks to those in attendance.

Answering the Big Questions

In only his second year at SMC, Kris Pratt was named the College's 2009 South Carolina Independent Colleges and Universities "Excellence in Teaching Award" recipient

And although he has only been at SMC for two years, he was recently named the recipient of SMC's 2009 Excellence in Teaching Award, presented by the South Carolina Independent Colleges and Universities.

"I was very honored to be selected, but at the same time I feel honored to work with all the wonderful people here at SMC. The thing I love about SMC is that everyone has a common mission. Yes, I'm here to teach Religion, but I'm also here — we're here - to prepare the students for Clemson or Furman or wherever they're going after SMC," Pratt states.

He says watching students grow during their time at SMC – from semester to semester – is a very rewarding experience.

"The relationship that develops over the course of a semester — over the course of the student's time at SMC — is a key part in shaping their outlook on not only their academic career, but their life as a whole," he says.

An assignment in his Introduction to Religion course that tends to provide a lot of insight into the minds of his students and helps Pratt understand them better is a reflection paper that each writes on their world views.

He does expect his students to ask a lot of questions, especially about why certain things are the why they are. But he adds that he is often surprised by some things that students will say, ask, or reveal.

"I really do find that they trust me - and that's important. Some reveal things in their papers that they might not tell anyone else that could be painful to them. From that, I have had some encouraging conversations with some students," Pratt says.

His often uses personal anecdotes to help students relate to and understand the course material.

"I try to use personal stories when it's applicable — about myself, my college experiences, my daughter. They like to laugh — and once they figure out when I'm kidding about something, they enjoy that because it helps establish connections," he adds.

Going off-book sometimes will often lead to beneficial discussions also.

"Occasionally something comes up in class that we'll discard the lesson plan for and go on that for a while. That's part of what when we ask these big questions cannot always be planned and cannot be put on an outline or on a Powerpoint," Pratt says.

He finds that the students at SMC are very open-minded, but they have a lot of questions - not only about the course material but also about their own faith, their role in the world, how the world works, and how religion plays into it all. And each comes into his class with their own religious background and views.

"For so long we're taught in school that you parrot back what the teacher tells you. I tell them they don't have to agree with me as long as they give me good reasons for what they're writing or saying. Ultimately I hope that, if they want to, they've learned a little bit more about their faith and some different ways of looking at things that they never thought of before. If I can make them think, I'm happy at the end of the day," Pratt comments.

There are times when a student will come to Pratt outside of class with those questions.

"From time to time I'll have a student come to my office to talk about the big questions, when students come to me with questions about Christianity, salvation, social issues — all the big issues they could deal with. I try not to declare to them this is what you must believe," he says.

One of the most rewarding things about teaching at SMC is seeing students that he has taught receive their diploma.

"The world is just opening up for them. They're at that stage where they can do anything and they're willing to ask questions and they're willing to engage tough issues and think outside the box. They hopefully will all go on to do great things. And that's what we're here for — to help put that into motion," says Pratt.

In Pratt's view, that's what makes SMC stand out.

Drake: SMC Played Key Role In My Life

SMC played a key role in Dwight Drake's life.

Despite having grown up only eight miles away, Drake, a 1965 alumnus, considers himself lucky to have attended then-Spartanburg Junior College.

"My father worked in the mill and had a plumbing business on the side. We had recently taken in my grand-parents, so there wasn't enough money for me to go off to college. But because I lived so close by, I was able to come here as a day student and work at the mill also," Drake says.

Drake worked second shift at Lyman Printing and Finishing Company while attending SJC.

After his graduation from SJC, Drake went on to attend and graduate from the University of Georgia with a Bachelor's in Political Science. Since his time graduating from both colleges, Drake has led a service-filled career for which he was honored this year as SMC Alumnus of the Year.

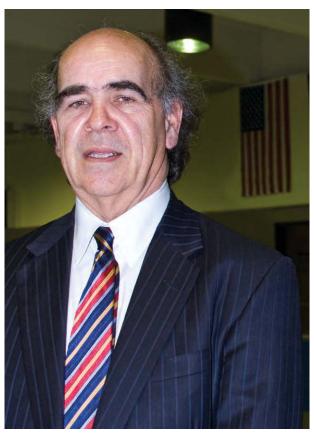

After his graduation from UGA,

Drake served in the U.S. Army for 19-months, with a tour in Vietnam, and then attended the University of South Carolina Law School.

While in law school and for a time afterwards, Drake worked on Gov. John West's campaign and then in his office. After his graduation, he served as legal counsel for Gov. West. He went on to serve on congressman William Jennings Bryan Dorn's campaign for governor in 1974. He left private practice in 1978 to work on Governor Dick Riley's campaign and would go on to serve as his executive assistant for five years.

Since joining the firm of Nelson Mullins Riley and Scarborough in 1983, Drake has focused on government relations, litigation and appellate work, having appeared and argued more than thirty times before the South Carolina Supreme Court and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Throughout his legal career he has worked with several higher education clients, including Clemson University, the University of South Carolina, and the Medical University of South Carolina.

He has represented BMW in securing passage of legislation that led to their location and expansion in Spartanburg County; and has litigated on behalf of passage of the Economic Development Bond Act, which led to the creation of Clemson University's International Center for Automotive Research (ICAR) and similar ventures at USC and MUSC.

He recalls his experiences at SJC fondly, saying that they helped shape his attitudes and career.

"Even if I had been financially prepared to go to a larger school, I probably was not prepared for a school that size. The size of SMC was perfect, with its small classes - and I had some wonderful professors here. It provided a great foundation for me to go on to UGA, and then to the USC Law School," Drake says.

He recalls a worry of his in transferring to UGA was that all of his credits earned at SJC would not be accepted. But they were.

"That speaks well of the institution [SJC]. I felt my instructors here prepared me better than many of my classmates at UGA who went to a four-year school for their first two years," Dake states.

He takes a great deal of pride in the fact his alma mater teaches key values that are important in life.

"This institution is built on the kind of values I grew up with in my family — and teaches that they are as important as the academic side. The values I grew up with were emphasized here in every way. The school helped those values stick with me even better. That was extremely important," he adds.

He says he hopes his daughters Marshall, 12, and Eliza, 9, are able to find those types of values at their college – and he would be thrilled if they choose SMC.

"I hope wherever they go to school, the culture and values are the same that I enjoyed here. I will always highly recommend SMC. Every parent and student has to make the decision that is right for them, but I think for a lot of students, a small campus setting simply works better. They will thrive and do better. I would encourage them in a heartbeat. I would be thrilled if either of my daughters decided to come here," Drake says.

"I, myself, take a great deal of pride in the fact that I went here. I wouldn't be here today if it weren't for SJC. Without it, UGA and law school would not have been a reality... it is the single most important part of my education."

Fields Continues Service to Community

Dr. George Fields has been a busy man since his retirement as President of Spartanburg Methodist College in 1997.

A lot of that comes from his service work in the Spartanburg Community - so much so that SMC honored this former president of 21 years during its recent Alumni Weekend with the 2009 Service Award.

"I have such high appreciation for the values of SMC — any award from it carries a very special meaning," says Dr. Fields.

Fields is currently serving as director of the Military Heritage Program of the Palmetto Conservation Fund and is also the acting director of the PCF's Upstate office in the Spartanburg County's Glendale community.

"When I retired, I wasn't sure what I wanted to do. I was 66 years old and felt like I had 10 more good years I could contribute to something. I wanted something that took me outside half the time and where I could do research to help keep my mind moving," comments Dr. Fields.

He became involved with a local organization that would ultimately go on to become the PCF and has since gone statewide in its efforts to preserve Revolutionary War battlefields.

"Before we became involved, South Carolina had already lost several, mostly due to development — so there's no way to reclaim them now. But I've been utterly amazed at what we've been able to do and the amount of interest it has generated over the past 11 years," Dr. Fields says.

In his role with the PCF, he works to create proposals for various battlefield sites and sell the state on them. And sometimes getting everyone to come together on heritage tourism isn't the easiest sell.

"You work on projects by building partnerships. I've found you don't get anything done alone. You have to build partnerships between state money, local money, private gifts and foundation work to fund these projects," he comments.

During his time with the PCF, the organization has worked on major projects at 11 battlefields throughout South Carolina.

Dr. George Fields stands beside Lawson's Fork Creek, near the site of the former Glendale Mill. The Glendale area is just one project on which Fields is working.

The most challenging, but at the same time most exciting, he says has been the main battlefield in Camden, which has already required $2 million of investment through three grants.

What does Dr. Fields enjoy the most about it all?

"It's actually learning exactly what happened where on a piece of ground. History books never tell you that. They give you a broad smear of it. At Camden, we knew within 400 to 500 yards where everything took place, but to actually learn the details is very meaningful. Especially when we're able to put a name on a forgotten grave," he says.

And for the past two years he has led the Glendale project — one that has several elements to it which project leaders hope will generate interest in that area of Spartanburg County, specifically around the site of the former Glendale Mill, which burned in 2004, on Lawson's Fork Creek.

The PCF has recently moved its offices into the abandoned Glendale United Methodist Church, where the Glendale Outdoor Leadership School is now based. Some of the goals are to turn that six-acre site into a leadership facility, develop the Lawson's Fork Paddling Trail — a 12 mile paddling trail from the Glendale Mill site to Pacolet — and establish a 25-acre greenway on the river.

"I think this is a wonderful project which will generate even more interest in the rich history of this community. What we want to do here is establish a preservation effort that people of all ages can enjoy and take part in," says Fields.

And while he enjoys his work on the Glendale project, once the Outdoor Leadership School is underway and stabilized, he plans to return all of his focus to battlefield work.

"I have too many irons in the fire for a man my age. But I'm going to follow through with this one because it is such a worthwhile project. I think if we can do something positive here, it can become a prototype for scores of communities just like this all through the south," Dr. Fields states.

(2, center) Ann Dobson talks with a group of donors (3, l-r) Terry and Raylene Stephenson are greeted by SMC President Dr. Charles Teague. More than 100 attended the event which recognized SMC's generous supporters and donors.

Even though our nation is experiencing some of its most uncertain economic times in many years, SMC is pleased to announce that $2,375,845 in total commitments were received in 2008.

Beginning January 1, 2008, the SMC Total Funds Campaign had a very good year. The campaign ended on December 31, 2008 with the College's Annual Fund surpassing its goal for the 30th straight year.

"SMC is very fortunate because donors give because they believe in your cause—not because they want to reduce wealth. If you have a worthy plan and stay true to your mission, friends and alumni will respond," said Dr. Charles P. Teague, SMC President. "In recent years, SMC has focused on building value and becoming more visible as we position the institution for the future."

In addition to a strong Annual Fund, the College received over $400,000 in capital gifts, over $230,000 for its endowment and over $224,000 in new planned gifts. Government grants provided over $250,000 for special services programs for worthy students.

"As I reflect on 2008 with all of its uncertainties, I am encouraged more than ever that our mission is one that is very meaningful in the higher educational community in which we serve," says President Teague.

"Committee of 200" Spearheading Project To Beautify Judd Lawn

The SMC Board of Trustees recently approved a project to raise funds for the beautification of the grounds surrounding Judd Residence Hall.

The "Committee of 200" seeks to enlist the support of 200 persons and organizations who will each contribute $1,000 toward the project - and reach an ultimate goal of $200,000.

The project includes many "Green" features, including the installation of an irrigation system, new topsoil, sodding, and new shrubbery. It will also include the replacement of the concrete pad at the base of the steps to Judd Hall, a new sidewalk from Judd Hall to the Walker Classroom Building, and the repair/replacement of the curbing and gutters on Kingman Drive.

Several leadership groups have already been asked to help contribute to the project, including current and former Trustees and the Alumni Council.

We ask that you take some time to consider this project and contribute to it if possible, at whatever gift level you could afford. Any gift designated toward the project would be greatly appreciated. Please also consider inviting some friends to join you in support of this important project.

For more information on the project and the "Committee of 200," please contact Don Tate, Director of Development, at (864) 587-4227 or via email at tated@smcsc.edu

Spartanburg Methodist College would like to express sincere thanks to its many supporters whose generous gifts help further the College's mission and provide a quality, Christian education to its students.

The following honor roll includes those dedicated alumni, friends, parents, and staff who provided gifts to the College between January 1, 2008 and December 31, 2008.

SMC Increasing Its Electronic Presence

SMC has recently joined the social networking scene in order to communicate further with both prospective and current students, as well as alumni and supporters.

The Office of Admissions, Athletic Department, Alumni Relations Department, and the Pioneer Learning Community all now are on Facebook.

The Facebook pages provide additional online outlets for information about the College and its programs. Features included on the pages are photos, contact information, the SMC Viewbook, the Athletic Magazine, news feeds, and others.

Also recently created is the "SMC Connections" student blog, which includes new postings from students every few weeks telling about what student life is like at SMC.

College officials say one of the major benefits of the Facebook pages and the student blog is the increased ability for students to interact with each other and SMC faculty and staff, through features like comment postings and discussion boards.

All of the Facebook pages allow Facebook members to join the page as 'fans,' join in on discussions, and post comments on the "Prospective students will be able to learn firsthand from other students' experiences at SMC and show their support for the College, its programs, and for each other," says SMC Director of Admissions Mike Queen.

SMC is also now on the popular web site Twitter, where you can find updates about campus events, athletics, and other things going on at SMC.

And the Office of Alumni Relations has established a presence on LinkedIn, which is a professional networking site that will allow alumnae to network together online, accelerate their own professional success, and strengthen their connection to SMC.

New Faces on Campus

Kathleen Brown Director, Learning Community

Kathy Brown was hired in January as Director of the Learning Community. She will also serve as a biology instruc-

Brown is a graduate of Barry University with a Bachelor's of Science in Chemistry with a minor in Biology in 1986. She received a Master of Education in Natural Science from Converse College in 2005.

Ms. Brown has served as an adjunct biology instructor at Converse College and Limestone College. She previously taught at Polk County High School in Columbus, NC, where she instructed biology and chemistry. Prior to that, she taught at the Paideia School in Atlanta.

She lives in Columbus, NC and enjoys organic beekeeping, reading, yoga, and self-defense exercises.

Cindy Barnette Campus Safety Officer

Cindy Barnette was hired in November as a Campus Safety Officer. Prior to coming to SMC, she was a Deputy and K9 handler with the Greenville County Sheriff's Department.

She also previously was an officer in the Greer Police Department.

Barnette is a 1997 graduate of SMC with an Associate's in Criminal Justice and a 2005 graduate of Anderson University with a Bachelor's in Criminal Justice.

She is a native of Greer and lives on houseboat on Lake Hartwell. She enjoys spending time on the lake, is learning to golf, and has a dog named Marley.

eslie can tell you all about each one of the eight horses. She says that she can even recognize them by how they sound sometimes.

That sense of hearing has become very attuned to her four-legged friends at the School for the Deaf and Blind because Leslie is blind.

Project manager Mike Hollifield says that Leslie is one of the success stories of the HALTER (Handicapped Athletes Learning to Enjoy Riding) program at the school.

HALTER was started in Spartanburg County in 1987 and moved to the School for the Deaf and Blind in 2006. It serves as a therapeutic horseback riding program for individuals with a wide range of physical, cognitive, and/or emotional disabilities, not only from the school but from across the Spartanburg community and even from several other Upstate counties.

"When I first started, I was mousy and had strength problems in my hands. But I think this program helped in the long run — it's given me a passion for horses and for helping people. I love the program and I like working with the kids and seeing them change," Leslie says. She is now a volunteer with the program.

This past academic year, the Kappa Sigma Alpha service fraternity at SMC partnered with the HALTER program to serve as vol-

That involved going through some training sessions in which they learned how to assist the riders and be there to walk with them and support them as they ride around the riding arena at the school.

Then they were able to actually get that hands-on experience — to be able to help students from the school ride the horses and see the heartwarming reactions from the students.

"I have a cousin who is mentally challenged. Programs like this didn't exist when she was younger - she never had this type of opportunity. For me, it really hits home to think this program is helping these kids and they're getting to do something fun by riding a horse — and we get to be just a small part of it," says KSA president Jessica Mack.

Program director Mike Hollifield says horseback riding is very therapeutic in several aspects and has provided countless benefits to HALTER program participants.

"It's good for exercises for anybody to ride. When you get on a horse you have to use every muscle in your body. It develops balance and helps develop your core muscles that help you maintain posture and good health," he says.

The horses that are part of the program are specially screened so that they will fit be able to meet the program's unique needs.

"What we need them for is different from what most people use them for. The biggest thing is attitude. We have to make sure that they have a good disposition and that they'll accept what we have to do with them with some of our kids. Some of the disabilities our participants may have are more challenging - possibly behavior-wise or multiple handicapping conditions," Hollified says.

Ultimately, it's a combination of factors that will lead to successful outcomes. But the one immediate reaction is the smiles.

"It's just the smiles and seeing that this does help the kids that makes this so rewarding. A horse is a magnificent animal. And whenever you can control a 1,000 pound animal, it changes your attitude about a lot of stuff. You don't have the fear of going out and doing new things or meeting new people. When you build that self-confidence, it helps in all kinds of other ways," Hollified comments.

The benefits do vary. It often can depend on the type and extent of a person's disability. But they are there — and very evident. "We just see so many benefits. Behaviorally, the kids get so much better. With autistic children, the rhythmic motion settles them down a lot after they're in about 10 or 15 minutes and carries over for two to three hours so they can go into the classroom and focus better. Doing something therapeutically like this without using drugs or anything like that that can make them more successful in the classroom," he adds.

Miss Mack says that she will always remember helping out with the HALTER program and is glad that she had the opportunity to do so.

"For KSA to do this is a big honor. We always do projects each year, but we've never been able to do anything like this. We're never going to forget this. We're going to always remember the kids that we helped and the impact that they left on our lives. We could face the same challenges they do - that could happen to us in a heartbeat. If we can come out and help them experience something fun and learn how to overcome challenges, maybe even get better, then that is awe-some" she comments.

KSA not only donated time and hands-on assistance to the HALTER program; the group also provided a $400 donation to the program for the installation of a water fountain for the horses.

"We're so thankful for what SMC and the students in KSA have done for our program this year. The watering fountain is an important part of what we want to do with our facilities for the program," says Hollifield.

Hollifield says that the program's major facilities undertaking is the construction of an indoor riding arena, for which plans are drawn up. Having such a facility would allow the program to continue during inclement weather and provide even additional riding space during good weather.

He adds that consistency in any therapy program is a key component to its success; and by having an indoor facility, the consistency of sessions would increase.

"I think we're making a difference in a lot of people's lives. We want to continue to do that and serve the public out there," Hollifield states.

The HALTER program also offers an opportunity for youth ages 10-14 to volunteer in its Pony Pals. This group learns how to groom, tack, and assist with horses outside the riding arena.

"We hope that some of the kids that participate in Pony Pals will develop a love for horses that will turn into something that they will carry with them into adulthood, possibly even into their career. There is definitely a vocational aspect to that," he adds.

HALTER program riding opportunities are available to individuals in the public who have a disability, are at least four years of age and weigh less than 200 pounds. Hollifield says volunteers are always welcome to help out with the program, but they must undergo a training session before being able to participate fully.

Graduates Leave SMC as "New Persons"

Spartanburg Methodist College conferred degrees on approximately 150 students on Saturday, May 9.

College President Dr. Charles Teague served as the keynote speaker for the ceremonies.

He told the parents present that their graduates are "... not the same person today as they were two years ago. Get to know these students again. They've changed. They are new persons today" and challenged the graduates to continue their education.

"The value of education lies far beyond money and material possessions. A liberal arts education teaches you to think. Thinking enables you to acquire information, to analyze it, to reach conclusions based on that analysis, and then communicate results to others.

"Education also enables you to discover your real self, set goals, to serve something greater than yourself, and to build your life on worthy values that exceed personal gratification. In order to do these things, you must be able to read, write, speak, compute mathematically, listen, learn, observe and study, These are precisely the intellectual activities that are common to a liberal arts education, and these are the substance of your SMC educational experience. You're now ready to put those skills to work so go to it,"Teague said.

He also challenged graduates to set goals of pursuing excellence; discovering what motivates them, understanding commitments and achieving meaningful relationships in life; becoming a leader with honorable motives; making of difference in the world; choosing values to enable themselves to become persons of integrity; and cultivating joy in their lives and a relationship with God.

"This life is not a rehearsal. It's the real thing, and you only get one shot at it, So, go for it! But as you do, be a person of great integrity with honorable values lighting your way. God has given you unique gifts and graces to become the person God created you to be. Don't waste those gifts & graces. Use them to make a difference in the world! Do these things and you will live well," he added.

He also expressed his gratitude to the graduating class, saying "Thank you for crossing my life's path and for allowing me to join your journey at SMC."

Graduating sophomore Harley Porter, of Columbus, NC, served as the student speaker for the commencement activities.

Serving as marshals for the ceremonies were freshmen Jessica Howles, of Inman, SC; Dana Smith, of Boiling Springs, SC; and Ashley Whitfield, of Spartanburg.

Jennifer Lamonica, of Toronto, was SMC's Highest Honor Graduate for the 2008-2009 academic year. In recognition of this honor, she received the first Trustee Medal at the 2009 commencement services. The award also includes a $500 gift.

SMC Touches The Community

Students and staff alike keep SMC's mission of service alive and well throughout the year by participating in various projects within the community.

Porter Receives National Honors

2009 SMC graduate Harley Porter, of Columbus, NC, was selected as a 2009 Coca-Cola National Finalist, based on scores earned in the All-State Academic Team Competition. As one of 150 national finalists, Porter will receive a $1,000 stipend.

The All-State Academic Team is sponsored by the Coca-Cola Scholars Foundation and is administered by Phi Theta Kappa Honor Society. The The All-USA/All-State Academic Teams programs annually recognize up to 360 outstanding two-year college students. Selection is based on nominations submitted by community college presidents or campus CEOs, who receive nomination materials in the fall.

Porter, a graduate of Polk County High School, was actively involved in student activities at SMC, as a member of PTK; editor of the Trail-blazer student newspaper; president of the Green Hope Environmental Group; and as a member of the SMC Players theater group. She will graduate this spring with an Associate in Arts and plans to transfer to a 4-year institution in the fall to eventually earn a PhD and teach History at the college level.

She is the daughter of Steven and Tina Porter, of Columbus; and Travis Saulman and Emily Porter, of Morganton, NC.

Facing off against a primarily NCAA Division II and III and NAIA schedule, the Pioneers had a very competitive season.

Marty Gantt is used to life presenting him with challenges.

But for Gantt, a rising sophomore at SMC from North Augusta, SC, those challenges started off pretty early.

While Gantt's mother was pregnant with him, his umbilical cord wrapped around his right hand. Only his thumb formed completely; the other fingers on his hand are only partially formed.

However, he does not consider that a disability and has never let it hold him back from what he wants to do.

Gantt became interested in baseball at an early age, with his father coaching baseball at North Augusta High School

But when Gantt wanted to join Little League, he was told that he would not be able to because of his hand.

"I thought I was just like everyone else. My mom always told me I was. I just wanted to be like every other little kid and play baseball," he comments.

His family appealed the decision and baseball has been a big part of his life ever since.

He adds that his right hand really doesn't affect his performance and wears a normal glove.

"It was harder when I was younger — when the glove was big and something hit it in the right way or the right spot, it would get knocked off. That still happens sometimes. But when I check swings and try to stop the bat, it just slips out of my hand. As I've gotten older I've learned to cope with it. It doesn't bother me now," he says.

He recalls being teased about his hand on occasion when he was young.

"Sure, it affected me at first. What little kid likes to be teased? But my mom told me not to listen to them. They weren't any better than me. She has never let anyone say anything about it. She's always been real proud of me. Now I realize that people who tease other people are probably just insecure about themselves," Gantt comments.

He shares some of his own words of wisdom that he says his parents instilled in him: "Don't listen to what other people have to say. Do what you know you can do and be the best you can be. Try harder than everyone else. That's what gets you places — your commitment to try hard and do your best."

As a junior, he took his North Augusta High School squad to the brink of a state championship. Then in 2008, he led them back to the playoffs where they lost their first game.

He was contacted by SMC head coach Tim Wallace during his junior year and was interested from the start. But what sold Gantt on SMC?

"The winning tradition. The stats show that SMC wins. Baseball is fun and winning makes it even better. Who doesn't want to win?" he comments.

So he signed with SMC - and he was up front with Wallace about his intentions.

"I told him I didn't want to be a normal pitcher. I wanted to hit too. And I wanted to win," Gantt states.

Wallace saw Gantt's spark from the get-go. "Marty is obviously a great player. We've known that from day one. He doesn't let anyone or anything get him down," Wallace states.

Gantt's focus this year was on helping lead the SMC Pioneers to the JUCO World Series. But at the same time, he says he wanted to build up a good average.

"At the beginning of the year I told Mark Rape [a fellow SMC pitcher] I was going to hit .500 this year," Gantt says.

Along the way to JUCO, Gantt put up impressive numbers all around — leading the region in pitching and hitting.

After pitching eight shutout innings to clinch the Pioneers' Eastern District title, Gantt went into SMC's sixth JUCO World Series appearance batting a hefty .426 with 58 RBI.

He led off SMC's Series opening appearance against San Jacinto by homering on the game's first pitch. SMC ended the game with a 7-1 loss.

He did double-duty for the Pioneers in game two against Cowley County, KS, striking out seven batters in five innings on the mound. He went 1-4 at the plate, scoring two runs and helping post SMC's 10-7 win.

In the Pioneers' final game of the Series, Gantt blew it open at the start. He nailed homeruns on three successive at-bats, including a grand-slam, to bring in seven runs. Unfortunately, that wasn't enough to seal the deal for the Pioneers to advance further in the Series.

Gantt, however, had become a hero in Grand Junction and a heartwarming story for the local and national media.

While at JUCO, Jayden Maes, a rising first grader in Grand Junction, an avid baseball fan and t-ball player, asked to meet Gantt. It turns out they both are missing fingers due to the same circumstances. So they spent some time talking and Gantt gave Jayden an autographed ball and a copy of an article on Gantt which had run in the local newspaper.

"Marty excelled on the big stage. He became a legend in Grand Junction – people love him out there. He was on TV every night," recalls Wallace.

In the end, Gantt helped lead the Pioneers to a fifth place finish in the JUCO World Series — and a school record 55-9 season.

Gantt was also the only Pioneer to be named to the All-Tournament Team and received the Homa Thomas Sportsmanship Award.

He finished the season above the .400 mark - not quite as high as he told Rape early in the season he would do — with a .410 average, the second highest on the Pioneer squad among everyday players.

His other end-of-season stats are equally as impressive, hitting 21 of the team's 77 homeruns for the season (the most of anyone on the squad) in 210 at-bats. He led the team with 92 runs, 86 hits, 70 RBIs, and a slugging percentage of .795.

On the pitching side, in 58.1 innings, Gantt notched 57 strikeouts against with a 1.85 ERA and finished the year 8-2.

He was also named 1st Team All-Region and 1st Team All-Eastern District, as well NJCAA Honorable Mention All-American.

But Gantt is modest about his abilities and considers himself a normal player.

"I'm not any more special than anyone else on this team. All these guys are great. The're fun to be around and there's never a dull moment," says Gantt.

He credits Wallace for the Pioneers' consistent success.

"The level of intensity that Coach Wallace expects us to play at everyday is really high. He never lets us play down to other teams' levels. It makes our game better," Gantt comments.

Wallace says he's glad Gantt will be coming back next year and hopes that he will help lead next year's team to an equally as impressive, if not better, season.

"It's been a special year coaching him and watching him play. He brings so much to the game — he's so positive, he's a fighter, he likes to laugh, and he is a friend to everyone. If I had a team full of Marty Gantts, I'd never worry about a thing. Then I wouldn't know what to do. He sets an example for others and has the type of leadership we'll need next year," Wallace states.

Gantt's goal is to transfer to a four-year college after he graduates from SMC next year. He knows that off-field performance is key to doing that.

"I'm trying to do good here at SMC because I didn't do great in high school. That held me back from going to places like Carolina. SMC is good for me though. It's where I need to be right now. I don't care where I go after — I just want to play baseball," Gantt states.

Obviously the prospect of going pro is out there also. So who's Gantt's pro team of choice?

"If I can get to the majors, I'll play for anybody. I've always grown up wanting to play major league baseball. My baseball room at home has pictures of Ty Cobb, Willie Mays, people like that. Who wouldn't want to go play in the pros?" he laughs.
